

THE CAPTURE OF GEN. STOUTON.—E. W. Stouton, of New York, has addressed a letter to the Times in answer to the one which appeared in that paper on Saturday last, derogatory to the character of the General. He says:—"The headquarters of General Stouton were, with the knowledge and assent of his superior, Gen. Casey, fixed at Fairfax Court House. There, or in that immediate vicinity, he had, when captured, two regiment one of cavalry, the other of infantry. The remainder, and bulk of his brigade, was about three miles distant. At the time of his capture his mother and sister were visiting him, the latter having been there about two weeks. They, with three of his aids, had apartments in and slept at the house of a Mr. Ford, a member of whose family is so indecently mentioned in the so-called extract. General's quarters were about a block distant. There he slept, as did also one of his aids; and there he, with his mother and sister, and all of his aids, took their meals.

"This Mr. Ford and his family were highly respected in the neighborhood, although it is probable that, like most of the residents there, they were unfriendly to the Union cause. I have information which leads me to believe that General Stouton had no acquaintance whatever with either of the female members of Mr. Ford's family. He, of course, believed them respectable, or he would not have placed his mother and sister under their roof.

"These facts sufficiently dispose of the unfounded statements and malicious insinuations contained in the communication referred to."

The Philadelphia Inquirer says, "Yesterday's dispatches from Vicksburg, to the 9th inst., add to, rather than decrease the muddle about the Indianola. Although we were informed a few days ago, on the authority of a paragraph in the Vicksburg Whig of the 5th of March, that the Rebels had blown up our captured Monitor in a spasm of fear caused by the appearance of a "quaker" gunboat, we are now assured that "the Indianola was so badly wrecked that the Rebels cannot raise her."—That same paragraph in the Vicksburg Whig had a very suspicious look about it. It appeared the day after Gen. Stevenson telegraphed General Pemberton that they (the enemy) were "raising" the Indianola. That was on the 4th of March, eight days after the engagement in which the Indianola was captured, and also eight days after the "quaker" gunboat was set adrift."

The Port Royal correspondent of the New York World says:—"The departure of General Naglee, who is ordered to report at New York by General Hunter, is the cause of universal regret among General Foster's troops, the officers of which waited upon him in a body on the 9th inst., and so expressed themselves.—In reply to their address, General Naglee said: "In the effort to sustain the organization in men and materials, as they were brought from North Carolina, and as left with me by General Foster, I was forced into a difference with General Hunter, and my appeal to the President of the United States was sustained by him. In the effort to carry out the order of the President I am unfortunately again resisted by General Hunter, and I am again forced to appeal to the President. But not until now did I know how far I was sustained by those with whom I have been so intimately connected."

The Journal of Commerce says:—"An American merchant, who came here in the City of Baltimore, brings intelligence of a new monster which is in process of construction for the Confederates, in the vicinity of London. It is 350 feet long, iron clad, with a formidable prow, and will be provided with four engines. Our informant describes her as one of the most terrible of the family of rams. That she is built for the Confederates he has no doubt—and he took special pains to ascertain the truth. These startling facts as well as others which he has found out concerning the numerous iron clad and other steamers which are being built in other parts of England, will be, if they have not already been, laid before the U. S. Government."

The correspondent of the New York World with the Army of the Potomac, writes as follows:—"I learn that Fitz Lee's and Wade Hampton's brigades of cavalry, after their recent attempt at a raid on our lines, went up into Page county, near the Blue Ridge, where they are now engaged in feeding up their horses, and exchanging their disabled animals for fat and fresh steeds, preparatory to an active spring campaign."
